It's been revealed that the new CEO of the Transport Asset Holding Entity earns a staggering $575,000 a year, while at the same time Sydney and NSW Trains members are still being offered a measly 0.3% pay increase...

Benedicte Colin's salary was revealed under questioning during the first day of a parliamentary inquiry which is, in part, investigating the rationale for the TAHE.

The government had previously refused to reveal what the CEO of the entity which has just 20 staff, was paid. Now we know why...
